IDENTIFY CONCERNS

Once we decided we wanted to compete in the Instructional Video Design STAR Event, we needed to decide what our video would be about. With one of us having a younger sister, we decided to focus on a child development topic. We thought about how we did not know much about how to encourage cognitive development in young children and thought most middle schoolers probably do not either. We decided to focus on an activity that could be used with young children

SET A GOAL

The goal of this project is to create an instructional video that will teach middle school students an activity that can be used with young children.

RESOURCES: Parent interview, internet sources, ClipChamp App, computer, FCCLA Adviser

EVALUATION: Personal reflection on how well we completed the video and met the competition requirements

ACT

The first thing we did to begin our project was to learn about the cognitive development of toddlers. After this we decided to create a video to instruct others on an activity that could be done with toddlers to promote this type of development. We decided to create a homemade activity board. We collected the materials we needed to make the board. Some supplies had to be purchased. We recorded ourselves making the board. Next, we edited the video and added the script voiceover.

FOLLOW UP

After completing our project, we reflected on the process. We think we came up with a good idea. We both learned much about planning a project and how to work together. We both improved our video editing skills. We made sure to thank all who helped us along the way after we were finished.
