

CAPITAL CAMPAIGN

'Building Together, Soaring Beyond'

ALUMNI SUPPORT

Recently, I have been asked several times why I chose to support the capital campaign. The immediate response is that it was the natural thing to do. Someone from my family has been directly involved in the school from the beginning. My siblings and I were taught that a good education is not only essential but also something that can never be taken from you. This quote was taped to my mother's refrigerator: "Education is a process that either never begins or never ends." For our family, the choice was clear. My husband and I passed this along to our children as well.

Three generations of my family have graduated from Fuqua including my siblings and me, my four daughters, and three grandsons. Of course, we all learned important academic lessons, but we learned so much more. In the safe and nurturing environment that is Fuqua School, we learned the values that are important to a productive, principled life.

I was fortunate enough to be a member of the faculty for over thirty years; and though I never made much money, I consider myself to be immeasurably wealthier for my years there. I was privileged to watch generations of students thrive in the care of everyone who is a part of the school from administration, to faculty, to all of the staff. Students are safe to be themselves on their paths to becoming the adults they are meant to be. Each student may get the same instruction, but they are able to take their own roads to fulfill their "boundless individual potential." I see this in my own family as well.

A new building is the essential next step as we all strive to fulfill the mission of the school for future generations of students. For my family, the call to support the capital campaign was an essential step as well.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Kathy Hargrove Andrews '68

We're excited to announce the launch of Fuqua School's ambitious capital campaign, "Building Together, Soaring Beyond." This transformative initiative will empower us to elevate our educational experience and ensure that our students are equipped to thrive in an ever-changing world.

By joining us in this endeavor, you'll be part of a legacy that will shape the future of our students.
