

Directions: Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

Source: A passage from the memoir of Thomas Jefferson, who was the U.S. Foreign Minister to France and lived in Paris in 1789. This segment, written in 1821, describes the leadership of King Louis XVI of France in 1789 during the French Revolution.

“[King Louis XVI] had not a wish but for the good of the nation, and for that object no personal sacrifice would ever have cost him a moment's regret. But his mind was weakness itself, his constitution timid, his judgment null, and without sufficient firmness even to stand by the faith of his word. His Queen too, haughty and bearing no contradiction, had an absolute ascendancy over him; and around her were rallied the King's brother d'Artois, the court generally, and the aristocratic part of his ministers . . . men whose principles of government were those of the age of [Louis XVI].”

Author: Thomas Jefferson

Date: July 27, 1821

Question 1: How might this passage from Thomas Jefferson's memoir be useful as evidence about the leadership of Louis XVI during the French Revolution?

 CONTINUE ON BACK

Question 2: What about this source might make it less useful as evidence about the leadership of Louis XVI during the French Revolution?
